Hub Mayor Awards City's Greenest Businesses

Four residential and 14 business leaders were chosen for Boston's 2010 Green Awards this morning at a ceremony in the city's Prudential Center.

Mayor Thomas M. Menino presented the awards to local business and neighborhood leaders who have worked to make Boston a "greener, more sustainable, and livable city," according to a statement from the mayor's office.

The following groups were recognized at the 4th Annual Mayor's Green Awards:

Green Residential Award recipients:

- Charlestown's Mishawum Park Tenants Association: Don Young
- River House Condominium Association in Boston's Beacon Hill
- Rollins Square Condominium Trust in Boston's South End
- Flavia and Tim Reardon: 18 Beethoven St., Jamaica Plain

Green Business Award recipients:

- Boston Properties
- Allston Collision Centers
- Boloco
- Boston Neighborhood Network
- Brigham & Women's Hospital
- CB Richard Ellis New England
- First Wind
- Jacobs Engineering Group
- Harvard Business School
- Millennium Partners
- New Generation Energy
- Southwest Boston Community Development Corp.
- Thompson Island Outward Bound Education Center
- Ula Café

"These local green heroes are shining examples of how even little steps in our every day lives can make a big difference in a city like Boston," said Jim Hunt, chief of environment and energy for the city of Boston. "Whether it's the efforts of a local business owner, a new resident, or the leadership of our mayor, collectively our efforts in sustainability are the reason Boston is now recognized as one of the greenest cities in the nation."
